FIELD MUSEUM'S

GUATEMALA

TOUR

And offended by their defeat, the men of Xibalba immediately said: "What shall we do in order to overcome the boys?" And turning to the boys, they said to them: "Go gather and bring to us, early tomorrow morning, four gourds of flowers." So said the men of Xibalba to the boys.

"Very well. And what kind of flowers?" they asked the men of Xibalba.

"A branch of red chipilin, a branch of white chipilin, a branch of yellow chipilin and a branch of carinimac," said the men of Xibalba.

"Very well," replied the boys.

From the Popol Vuh , sacred book of the Maya Quiche, in which is related the trials of the boys, who were like the gods of Greek myths, in Xibalba, comparable to Hades.

I lay no claim to completeness for this booklet. It is simply an attempt to anticipate some of the questions about wild and garden plants which will be asked by the members of Field Museum's Guatemala Tour, October 27 to November 12, 1967.

My selection of plants is of those which by their beauty, stature or prominence on the route and during the time of our Tour, will claim the attention of our group. Even for this purpose there will be omissions, and in some cases, the Spanish names will not be those most widely accepted in Guatemala.

The listing is based on notes taken during my trips in Mexico, Guatemala and Central America, from information obtained in the "Flora of Guatemala," published by Field Museum Press, and with the counsel of Dr. Louis O. Williams, Chief Curator of Botany, and Dr. Antonio Molina R., a field staff member in Central America.

Phil Clark

"The exceedingly varied types of soil and topography and diverse geological history of the country, ranging from ancient mountain masses connected with North America to relatively youthful volcanic areas, combined with marked altitudinal and climatic variations--hot desert to cold alpine regions--have given Guatemala the richest flora in all Central America with an estimated total of 8,000 species of vascular plants. Of this number, many are endemics confined to particular canyons and volcanoes. Many genera and species of the United States and Mexico reach their southern limits of distribution in Guatemala, while a large number of South American genera and species either reach their northern limits of dispersal here or are unknown elsewhere from other parts of Central America. Orchidaceae, Leguminosae and Compositae are especially prominent, and include hundreds of species, many of which are not found outside Guatemala.

"The great diversity of the country is responsible for the following large numbers of floristic regions: (1) the limestone plains of Petén; (2) the mangrove swamps along both coasts; (3) the rain forests of the Atlantic coast; (4) the low savannas of Izabal and Petén; (5) the mixed forest of the Pacific plains; (6) the arid deserts plains-chaparral of the plateaus of Oriente and valleys of the Rio Montagua and Rio Blanco; (7) the wet mountain forest of Alta Verapaz; (8) the mixed mountain forest of the Pacific bocacosta; (9) the upland mixed forest of temperate and cold regions; (10) the coniferous forests; and (11) the alpine regions..." ---from "The Vegetation of Guatemala, a Brief Review" by Paul C. Standley and Julian A. Steyermark in Plants and Plant Science in Latin America, 1945.

"Of the approximately 1,800 species in about 175 genera of Orchidaceae found in North and Central America, Guatemala has 527 species and 25 varieties in 98 genera. This number is exceeded only by Costa Rica (half the size of Guatemala) with some 900 species in about 115 genera and Mexico (about 17 times the size of Guatemala) with a little more than 600 species in about 80 genera." ---Ames and Correll: Orchids of Guatemala, Fieldiana Vol. 26.
